The World Almanac and Encyclopedia ,1899 Implications of the Great Depression for the Development of the International Monetary System Michael D. Bordo,Barry J. Eichengreen,1997 In this paper we speculate about the evolution of the international monetary system in the last 2 3 of the 20th century absent the Great Depression but present the major post Depression political and economic upheavals WWII and II and the Cold War We argue that without the Depression the gold exchange standard of the 1920s would have persisted until the outbreak of WWI It would have been suspended during the war and for a period of postwar reconstruction before being restored in the first half of the 1950s The Bretton Woods Conference would not have taken place and instead of a Bretton Woods System of pegged but adjustable exchange rates and restrictions on capital account convertibility an unreformed gold exchange standard of pegged exchange rates and unlimited international capital mobility would have been restored But this gold exchange standard would have collapsed even earlier than actually was the case with Bretton Woods The move toward floating exchange rates that followed would have taken place well before 1971 in our conterfactual We construct a model of the international monetary system from 1928 1971 and simulate its implications for the determination of the world price level and the durability of the hypothetical gold exchange standard We then examine based on regressions for a 61 country panel the implications for economic growth and resource allocation of allowing 1920s style international capital mobility after World War II Based on the implications of our model simulations and the capital controls regression we contemplate the implications for institution building and international cooperation of the no Great Depression scenario Editor & Publisher ,1925 The fourth estate American Monthly Review of Reviews Albert Shaw,1930 U.S. Camera Annual Tom Maloney,1953 United States Code Service, Lawyers Edition United States,1936 International Monthly ,1901 Popular Science Monthly ,1901 Army-Navy-Air Force Register and Defense Times ,1927 Classroom Connect Newsletter ,2001 Characteristics of Doctoral Scientists and Engineers in the United States ,1993
