WALTHER HP ARMY PISTOLS (P-38)

This pistol is chambered for the same cartridge as the Luger 9mm but differs from all other Army pistols in that it has the following characteristics:

No. 1—The outside hammer operates on the double action principle, the same as the Walther PP and PK pistols and because of this the hammer must not be cocked by hand for the first shot.

No. 2—When firing the first shot double action the trigger is regular military double pull thus permitting the first shot to be perfectly aimed. In other words, there is a distinct step in the trigger which indicates that a very light extra pull will fire the cartridge.

No. 3—Upon feeding the first cartridge from the magazine to the chamber, the pistol remains automatically uncocked. It is consequently not necessary to release the hammer to take the gun off cock.

No. 4—The safety operates directly upon the firing pin and serves at the same time to uncock the pistol. The hammer, which is cocked, after the firing of the shot, may be released by merely placing the safety in safe position which may easily be done with the thumb of the left hand.

No. 5—The firing pin is always locked whereby the pistol, even when not on safe, is nevertheless, free of the possibility of accidentally firing.
