Native peoples retain a variety of traditional foods along with the new ones that have become part of their diet. Even new foods like Native American corn, blueberry, and wild rice have become part of their diet. Native Americans have also incorporated European, African, and Asian ingredients into their diet. The early records of Native American food contact with European, African, and Asian peoples show the revitalization of indigenous foods that had been passed out of use. The most common Native American foods have generally included beans, squash, sunflowers, wild rice, and wild nuts like avocados, papayas, and cacao.
