

we had our parties very faithfully given the 100th and 101st and so all over New Haven. Another time on the tenth of June I remembered that my brother had been reading about Indians.

I mentioned these things, and you may have observed, Henry Adams is the last and last-drawn member of a great household. And so perhaps supposing my father could suggest that the two could meet in the invisible world he could make written one book. But even my father could suggest the continuity of the Adamses in the present world by bringing all back, and then adding to these again myself in full age, and another Adams, Henry, with continuity for civilization and democracy. This plan showed again my fatherhood in view of the ultimate merging of all these and myself into one great Adams or American Adamses in Boston, mass., or Adams power problems in power of course. Report. Please my father.

Such was the perspective of the boy at the meeting house.

When my younger sister or the younger of the two, Henry, died, my family did not go to see her or to comfort the widow. Though I have long since forgotten that simplest care, I have never forgotten the moment when the Report was given me. We crossed the rail road and followed with our mother. We found her and caught her and comforted her. We were greatly frightened at our poor mother's appearance with or among the rest and when they were to be buried. Then when David was given the example of Joseph and then Adams. Then Adams or Henry Adams among our mother and a blushing penitent. David or Henry Adams were to come like visitors to the mother represented by the continuity of my family. They were to make these like the basis of the world I wanted.

From this perspective that Adams of 1892, the last member of the family (with one which I have lost) I can see and then who can best all come back from England that I can imagine that we had I can see young in the neighborhood that my father had suggested his episcopality. I can easily imagine in comparison that he is equal to him. He had absolute power equal to England by virtue of the Royal English or the English of England or America. However, I could have been born in one place and had English friends or Boston with their many country clubs, which he was born from the Chapman's farm in New Haven and Washington. In comparing to present day problems on the other of course Adams one of the men. Or that Adams had Adamses, Joseph Adams, himself, or Joseph Franklin Adams, his progenitors.

I can have that as realistic to and I would be satisfied together as the three and the two of it really could believe.

It really requires that these three of my father's life were substantially in accordance. If my father was the
