Overview

Before beginning this section review with your students the objectives listed in the Student Edition. This section introduces students to the nonspecific defenses of the human body, including skin and mucous membranes. Students will then learn that pathogens that make it past the first line of defense face the inflammatory and temperature responses that can be very effective in killing the invader.

Bellringer

Ask students to make a list of the many ways the body prevents infectious organisms from entering. (skin, mucous membranes, nose hairs, etc.) When they are finished, have them share their lists. Ask them if the barriers on their lists can distinguish between the types of infections and can prevent specific ones. (no) TAKS 2 See 15A

Discussion

Basic

Ask students what happens when they get a wood splinter in their finger and they don't get it out within the first day or so. (The area turns red, becomes sore, and may swell.) What happens after several more days, if the splinter isn't removed? (Pus may form around the splinter; years ago this was called "festering.") Ask them why they think the pus is whitish in color. (White blood cells are converging on the area of the wood splinter and it is being digested.) 15 Verbal TAKS 2 See 15A, 15B 11B

Two Lines of Nonspecific Defenses

Some animals, including turtles, clams, and armadillos, defend themselves with their hard armor shells. However, even armor will not protect against the most dangerous enemies that they or the human body faces—harmful bacteria, viruses, fungi, and protozoa. You, as well as most animals, survive because your body's immune system defends against these pathogens. A pathogen is a disease-causing agent. The immune system consists of cells and tissues found throughout the body. The body uses both nonspecific and specific defense mechanisms to detect and destroy pathogens, thereby preventing or reducing the severity of infection. 1

First Line of Nonspecific Defenses

The body's surface defenses are nonspecific, meaning they do not target specific pathogens. Your skin is the first of your immune system's nonspecific defenses against pathogens. Skin acts as a nearly impenetrable barrier to invading pathogens, keeping them outside the body. This barrier is reinforced with chemical weapons. Oil and sweat make the skin's surface acidic, inhibiting the growth of many pathogens. Sweat also contains the enzyme lysozyme, which digests bacterial cell walls. 1 2

Mucous membranes cover some body surfaces that come into contact with pathogens. Mucous (MEYOO-kooz) membranes are layers of epithelial tissue that produce a sticky, viscous fluid called mucus. Mucous membranes line the digestive system, nasal passages, lungs, respiratory passages, and the reproductive tract. Like the skin, mucous membranes serve as a barrier to pathogens and produce chemical defenses. Cells lining the bronchi and bronchioles in the respiratory tract secrete a layer of mucus that traps pathogens before they can reach the warm, moist lungs, which are an ideal breeding ground for microorganisms. Cilia on cells of the respiratory tract continually sweep mucus toward the opening of the esophagus. Mucus then can be swallowed, sending pathogens to the stomach, where they are digested by acids and enzymes. 3

Skin and mucous membranes work to prevent any pathogens from entering the body. Occasionally these defenses are penetrated. You take pathogens into your body when you breathe, because many microbes and microbial spores are suspended in the air. Other pathogens may be present in the food you eat. Pathogens can also enter through wounds or open sores. When invaders reach deeper tissue, a second line of nonspecific defenses takes over. 3

SCID To illustrate our dependence on a functional immune system, show students a picture of David, the “boy in the bubble.” David was born with severe combined immune deficiency (SCID), a disease characterized by the inability to produce B cells and T cells, which play key roles in the immune system. SCID patients must live in a protected environment because the slightest infection can lead to death. David died at the age of 12 after an unsuccessful bone marrow transplant.
