A Parisian in America \(Classic Reprint\) S. C. De Soissons, 2015-07-11 Excerpt from A Parisian in America Mr W D Howells said once that in America a book's fate is in the hands of the women. If they do not know what is good said he they do know what pleases them and it is useless to quarrel with their decisions for there is no appeal from them. Besides being a great admirer of her sex as without woman civilization would be impossible I also have an exalted opinion of her good taste and exquisite refinement and therefore I entrust the fortunes of this book to her gentle hands. Paris in America \(Classic Reprint\) Rene Lefebvre, 2017-12-02 Excerpt from Paris in America. In a recent lecture after commenting on the intense sympathy which existed twenty or thirty years ago between Americans and Frenchmen when all seemed inspired with the friendship of Lafayette and Washington, Laboulaye asked Why is it that this friendship has cooled? Why is it that the name of America is not so dear to us as it was in those days? It is due to slavery. We had always hoped that something would be done to put an end to an institution which was regarded by the founders of the Constitution as fraught with peril to the country but instead of this the partisans of slavery having obtained the ascendant have continually been engaged in efforts to perpetuate it and extend its limits so that we have ceased to feel the same interest in Americans. He concluded the same lecture with the words America is the future of civilization, America is the future of liberty. When her territory shall be come as populous as that of France, freemen will occupy it with a system of Government which will with irresistible force draw all the world to follow the example. It is for this that I am so interested in American progress; it is for this that I wish to direct your attention toward it.
