

Concussion (Head Injury)

Concussion is a type of traumatic brain injury (TBI) caused by a bump, blow, or jolt to the head that results in the brain moving rapidly back and forth inside the skull. This sudden movement can cause the brain to strike the inner walls and structures of the brain, causing bruising and damage.

Symptoms and Recovery:

The symptoms of a concussion can vary but often include headache, confusion, dizziness, nausea, and fatigue. Patients with concussions may temporarily lose consciousness or experience a brief loss of memory. Symptoms often begin immediately but may take days to weeks after the injury. Recovery is a gradually graded process of physical exertion.

- Gradual return to normal daily activities following the injury.
- Avoid all physical, cognitive, and cognitive activities with a risk of re-injury.
- Allow patients to use cues of normal activities whenever possible.

Diagnosis and Treatment:

While most concussions should not require treatment, more severe concussions may require medical attention. The risk of complications following multiple concussions has been shown to increase.

Prevention:

Preventing concussions involves proper safety measures:

- Wear appropriate protective equipment (helmet, safety gear) and practice safe habits to prevent injury.
- Encourage fans attending sporting events to use common sense measures such as avoiding rowdiness and leaving the stadium if they are impaired.
- Encourage safe, active movements such as running during track and field events.
