Nutritional Ergogenic Aids Adriana Marina Coletta, 2011 Mixed results in terms of performance benefits have been found when comparing carbohydrate CHO and carbohydrate protein CHO P supplementation during endurance exercise. Thus, this study assessed performance from three different supplements CHO P CHO double carbohydrate CHO CHO as compared to a placebo PLA during a time trial (TT) run. Twelve male recreational runners, age 32.4 ± 9.5 yrs, body mass index (BMI) 22.7 ± 1.5 kg m², VO₂max 59.68 ± 7.53 mL kg⁻¹ min⁻¹, 100% white, individually completed four 12-mile TT runs 7–10 days apart at about 75% of their race pace. Dietary and physical activity consistency within the 24-hour time period prior to each run was controlled via individualized diet and activity prescriptions based on the diet consumed and the physical activity engaged in prior to TT 1. Throughout each TT run, participants consumed a 600 mL load of one of the four aforementioned supplements. Supplement order was counterbalanced with a Latin square design. Endurance performance was measured by time to complete the 12-mile run and time to complete the last 1–2 miles of the run where participants were instructed to run at maximal effort (100% race pace). A main effect of time occurred during the TTs for perceived exertion (RPE) and heart rate (HR). RPE (Borg 10-point scale) significantly increased from the mid-point of the TT to completion of the run (4.7 ± 0.7 vs 9.7 ± 0.9 p < 0.05).
