As a result, the system becomes less effective than the original system. Furthermore, additional costs must be paid for insurance. Therefore, it is better and more efficient to maintain the original system.

As our movement begins to gather momentum, it is essential that we know exactly what resources are available to us. A central role in this is played by supporting organisations, from within and from outside the movement. Such bodies can provide a variety of services, from legal advice to printing, from training to public relations, and from fund-raising to general support and guidance.

For responses made within 10 minutes, and responses made over 10 hours, the global distribution was highly skewed, with most responses being local.

As the 1970s unfolded, the two sides continued to exchange proposals. These proposals reflected a growing recognition that negotiations must be based on the concept of political equality and that both sides must contribute to the development of the Central African Republic. The two sides also agreed to a
