It summarizes two earlier studies that examined selenium and beryllium discharges from a power plant in Pennsylvania, the Montour Steam Electric Station operated by Pennsylvania Power and Light Company. The authors extend the earlier analysis to include calculation of pollutant exposure associated with consumption of animal and vegetable products raised in the region surrounding the Montour plant. Specifically they calculate how much the incidence of cancer and selenosis might increase in the regional population that consumes drinking water or fish from the Susquehanna River or any of several animal or vegetable products raised in the region. The results indicate that Montour selenium and beryllium discharges should have a negligible effect on the incidence of selenosis and cancer in the regional population.    The Arithmetic Teacher, 1988    Together We Build John Gilcrest, Sam Ruvkun, 2002    Motor Vehicle Driver Eye Position and Control Reach Anthropometrics.
