Fidler, 2015-06-16 Excerpt from A Handbook of Orchestration The paramount need in music teaching at the present time is the training of students as listeners In order to listen intelligently one must understand the language that is spoken The principal language of the music of to day is that of the Orchestra An intimate knowledge of the grammar of orchestration is then the necessary technical equipment of the intelligent listener The best way to attain this knowledge is by writing orchestral scores which should in no case be original composition for one cannot learn the grammar of a language and write poetry in it simultaneously Twenty years experience of teaching orchestration on these lines by orchestrating piano music already in existence without reference to other branches of musical theory has convinced me that good listeners can be produced in this way and that all students particularly singers and pianists can be aided thereby towards sound musicianship Incidentally if a student is at the same time working through the ordinary academic routine of musical theory which results in composition by the time he arrives at that goal he has already at hand the technical knowledge of the Orchestra which enables him to transcribe his ideas directly to the Full Score About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
