FAQs:

Can everyone have a vaccine?

Most vaccines are suitable for everyone. Some vaccines may not be suitable for use with children or people who have a health condition or treatment that impairs the function of their immune system. If an individual is poorly or has a fever, then their vaccination may be postponed until they are better.

What is a booster vaccine and why do we need it?

For some vaccines a further round of exposure to the vaccine is required to increase (or 'boost') immunity against the disease. Immunity against some diseases can fade over time and it is important to keep up to date with booster vaccines to ensure as good protection as possible.

One example of routine childhood vaccinations is MMR vaccine. The first dose is given at the age of 12 months and the second dose is given at around three years and four months, before starting school. Having both doses gives long lasting protection against measles, mumps and rubella.

How long does it take to develop a vaccine?

Normally it can take around 10 years or more for a vaccine to be developed. In the case of COVID-19 this has been much quicker as scientists from around the world had made major advances in vaccine development over recent years and shared information based on existing research into other Coronaviruses. Extra funding was also made available and vaccine manufacture began at the same time that the vaccine was being tested in people – called the 'trial phase'.
