Peer Relationships and Adjustment at School Allison M. Ryan, Gary W. Ladd, 2012-03-13 This volume examines how peers influence adolescents' beliefs and behaviors in school covering topics like peer relations dynamics and developmental issues. It explores why and how peers influence each other and how teacher practices impact peer relations and school adjustment benefiting researchers and practitioners.

Peer Relations and School Adjustment Mohsen Mir Mohammad Sadeghi, 2012 This thesis is based on a longitudinal study of the Iranian pre adolescents entering junior high school in Iran. It looks at the effect of peer relationships on school adjustment using a non experimental design. The importance of adjustment to school and its consequences to a child's development has been documented in previous research. Moreover, it can be argued that school adjustment becomes even more essential after transfer to a new school. One of the major contributors to school adjustment is the child's relationship with peers. Studies on peer relationships consider three major aspects for that: friendship, sociometric status, and relationships in cliques. However, such aspects have seldom been studied simultaneously. Additionally, a considerable body of literature exists concerning social networks that can be successfully utilised to examine children's relationships in the school. Social networks provide a good opportunity to develop an understanding of children's relationships. This study endeavours to determine associations between the aspects of a child's relationships and adjustment to school using some terminology and methods from the social networks literature. This study draws upon data on 389 participants from first year of junior high schools in Iran. The data was collected at the beginning of the 2008-09 school year and again at the conclusion of the school year. The longitudinal design of the study facilitated the comparison between the two timeframes and the opportunity to measure the effects of the three relationship types on different aspects of school adjustment. Results depict meaningful associations between the two domains of this study, i.e. peer relations and school adjustment, and emphasize the role that children's peer relations can have on their adaptation. The study also reveals the importance of including different types of peer relations collectively in the research. Implications for practice and direction for future research are suggested based on the findings.

Theory of Mind in Relation to Other Cognitive Abilities, volume II Ann Dowker, Douglas Frye, 2025-08-11 This Research Topic is the second volume of the Research Topic Theory of Mind in Relation to Other Cognitive Abilities. Please see the first volume here. Theory of mind and its development have been subjects of much research over the last 40 years. It is generally thought to be very important in cognitive and social development. However, there is still much debate as to how it should be defined and even as to whether it is a single entity. In particular, there is controversy as to the extent to which it should be seen as a specific cognitive module or rather as dependent on or mutually developing with other cognitive abilities and characteristics such as language, metacognition, executive function, and cognitive and perceptual styles that emphasize gist versus detail strong versus weak central coherence It is also possible that the theory of mind itself has several different components which may be related to different degrees different cognitive abilities and characteristics Any relationships between the theory of mind and other cognitive characteristics may also vary with age and may differ between typically developing children and those with autism and other atypical conditions Gaining a greater understanding of these issues is important to increasing our understanding of theory of mind itself the nature of cognitive development the similarities and differences between typically and atypically developing children and whether it may be possible to devise interventions to improve theory of mind either directly or by means of improving other abilities The goal of the current Research Topic is to bring together articles on various aspects of the theory of mind and any concurrent and longitudinal relationships to other cognitive abilities and characteristics These articles may involve studies of children adults or both It is expected that they will primarily include empirical research papers but theoretical articles literature reviews and meta analyses are also welcome

Friendships Facilitate School-Related Adjustment During Adolescence Leah Lessard, 2019 This dissertation consists of three studies that examine when and how friendships facilitate school related adjustment The studies rely on data drawn from a large longitudinal school based study of ethnically and socioeconomically diverse adolescents from sixth grade to one year post high school Study 1 examines developmental changes in academic support from friends relative to families across the four years of high school as well as how such changes relate to perceived college readiness at the end of high school and college enrollment one year later Results from parallel process latent growth curve models indicate that friends can provide adolescents with the academic support to promote college going confidence and enrollment especially when such support keeps pace with the increasing school related stressors across the high school years Narrowing in from the academic support that friends in general provide Study 2 examines variation in academic support across friends Specifically differences in friend support i e academic and emotional support are investigated as a function of friendship maintenance i e new versus maintained friends and as predictors of school related affect i e school belonging school liking academic identification and burnout one year later Multilevel structural equation models accounting for multiple friends nested within students demonstrate that friendship maintenance across the transition to high school relates to more positive school affect at tenth grade in part due to higher levels of perceived academic support from friends e g homework help course taking advice but not emotional support Study 3 builds on Study 2 to examine the achievement implications of another friendship characteristic dissimilar friendship Specifically extending existing conceptions of cross group friendships I consider the academic benefits of cross class friendship i e reciprocal relationships between peers with different levels of parental education Multilevel analyses reveal that associations between parental education and academic achievement i e grade point average standardized achievement scores and teacher rated academic engagement are reduced when students have at least one cross class friendship at sixth grade Together these studies highlight how adolescents academic adjustment is shaped in complex ways by their close peer relationships and provides a more nuanced understanding of the academic function of friendships The findings advance our understanding of friends function as academic resources during a developmental phase frequently characterized by declining academic engagement and achievement
