These findings are not unique to our study. Many other studies have also found positive group growth effects. For example, when given supportive group feedback, the participants had a positive healthy change experience. This finding is notable, as other groups have reported a negative or supportive but problematic healthy change experience. Many groups have also found that a healthy change group had more psychological openness, which has been associated with positive health outcomes. These findings are consistent with the theory that healthy change groups are able to support and encourage members. If these suggestions from previous research are true, then a healthy change group may be an appropriate intervention for individuals who are seeking to make healthy change decisions and acts.

education subcommittee and a money committee to finance advertising for campaign activities, and the campaign finance proposal was introduced and incorporated into the campaign finance committee's proposed campaign finance legislation. This was the first time that the campaign finance committee had incorporated campaign finance legislation into its proposed campaign finance legislation.

President Bush's budget proposal has received a fair play in "Budget 2001" and the new changes that have followed by giving additional money. Programs of education, science, and space have all suffered as Congress cut off most of money for science and space. The new budget will help science and technology to improve the economy of U.S.A. These increases will help students and young adults to grow up stronger by giving them more financial support and better opportunities.

Finally, grouping colleagues may improve and prevent a sense of anomie that can result from isolation, alienation, and powerlessness among group members facing difficult decisions. The linking of colleagues in a group can be a key to a sense of mutual support and confidence.
