then portioning it out to grab and go meals for later. If you've ever had your leftovers from dinner to take with you for lunch then extend them you've already mini meal prepped. Generally though meal prepping refers to preparing 3-7 days worth of food at a time. Think of it like keeping your lunches for the week all at once instead of keeping your lunch hours running. You can use this same technique for breakfast, lunch, dinner, and snacks. Meal prepping isn't necessarily a waste and reduces time to the outside world whether the plan is a diet or a budget. When keeping your regular day out of the question meal planning will allow you to still eat healthy meals without having to do it every day. Meal planning isn't for everyone. It is good for those who value convenience and for more than one person. With meal prepping you generally eat the same thing for a few days in a row so if you don't like leftovers or get bored with food meal prepping isn't for you. If having nutritious food while maximizing your time and budget is more valuable to you than doing something different every day meal planning is your ticket. I've generally not seen a meal prep person or maybe one other person do a whole meal. Meal planning for a whole family would be quite difficult but the result would be a meal plan that is stored in the refrigerator for a slow day in the night. In addition to the way food is packed and the individual nuances of your refrigerator can impact the usefulness of your refrigerated meal. The food is acceptable in terms of texture and flavor will be subject to the eater. Always begin with the refrigerator guidelines to both the FDA and then value them against your own preferences. In general I don't like to make more than a few days worth of food but I find that both the food and the time are well worth it.
