N. Batta, 2000 Tourism and the Environment Helen Briassoulis, Jan van der Straaten, 2012-12-06 The issue of maintaining a balanced relationship between tourism and the environment has received considerable attention since the 1970s. However, only in the 1980s and 1990s did it become a topic of systematic academic inquiry and research distinguished from the broader area of the environmental impacts of recreation and leisure activities. This volume dwells on the environmental and economic impacts of tourism and is divided as follows: Part 1 Introduction and Overview; Part 2 Tourism and the Environment: General Considerations; Part 3 Regional Issues; Part 4 Economic Issues; Part 5 Policy Issues. The work is complemented by a subject index.

Issues in Environmental Planning Henk Voogd, 1994. Cities and regions are the foci for many environmental problems such as resource depletion, air and water pollution, and the production of waste, but they also have a central role to play in finding solutions to global environmental problems. It is in cities that people can develop solutions, alternatives to resource-intensive modes of transport, cost-effective waste recycling, and environmentally friendly building and production technologies, for example. Daily environmental problems feature in the media, but although those heighten awareness of the issues, progress towards solutions is often frustratingly slow. Environmental planning approaches have tended to be piecemeal, uncoordinated, or even nonexistent. However, the urgent advice in this volume is that the complexity of the natural environment and of urban and economic systems requires an integrated approach to policymaking and decision taking, one that involves all the actors and agents who determine the environmental effect of cities and urban areas. It is the aim of the contributors to this volume to bridge the gap between environmental analysis and policy implementation. They focus on issues in environmental planning from different viewpoints and from different international experience. All the authors recognize that to address the environmental considerations of urban and regional policy successfully means that environmental considerations must pervade all decision taking affecting the city and its environment. This volume provides the groundwork necessary in achieving this aim and should prove useful to academics and students of all subjects involving environmental sciences as well as to policymakers and practitioners in environmental affairs.

Policy Framework of Kenya's Tourism Sector Since Independence and Emerging Policy Concerns Moses Ikiara, 2001. Sustainable Tourism in Islands and Small States: Issues and Policies Lino Briguglio, 1996. This is one of a pair of volumes in a projected interdisciplinary series on islands and small states. This text presents a number of different concepts and policies concerning islands and island states. It deals with the economic viewpoint, alternative forms of tourism, the definition of sustainable tourism, size constraints, monitoring and control, implications of climate change, and other topics.

Community Perceptions and Attitudes Toward Tourism Domingo Alberto Medina Dagert, 1993. Southeast Asia Thomas R. Leinbach, Richard Ulack, 2000. The Great Depression hit Americans hard, but none harder than African Americans and the working poor. This brief, engaging book covers the range of African Americans' experiences during the 1930s. Cheryl Lynn Greenberg explores employment issues, the New Deal's effect on African Americans' family and community changes, and how the coming of war affected the population. The book straddles the particular with examinations of specific communities and experiences and the general with explorations of the broader effects of racism discrimination family class and political organizing
