QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The car has been running fine for the last 10 years, but recently the engine has been making a noise that sounds like a rattling or knocking sound. The noise is most noticeable when the car is idling or driving at low speeds. I have checked the oil level and it is at the correct level. I have also checked the spark plugs and they appear to be in good condition. What could be causing this noise and how can I fix it?

ANSWER The noise you are describing is likely caused by a problem with the engine's timing belt or valves. The timing belt is responsible for synchronizing the rotation of the crankshaft and the camshaft. If the timing belt is worn or loose, it can cause a rattling or knocking sound. The valves are responsible for allowing fresh air and fuel to enter the combustion chamber and allowing the exhaust to exit. If the valves are worn or damaged, they can also cause a rattling or knocking sound. To diagnose the problem, you should have a mechanic inspect the timing belt and valves. If the timing belt is worn, it should be replaced. If the valves are worn, they should be adjusted or replaced. Once the problem is fixed, the noise should be gone.
