Marriages and Families in the 21st Century

Tasha R. Howe, 2011-09-15 Marriages and Families in the 21st Century provides an in depth exploration of a traditional field of study using a new and engaging approach. The text covers all the important issues including parenting divorce aging families balancing work and family family violence and gender issues using a bioecological framework that takes into account our status as both biological and social beings. Using this lens which emphasizes the individual's interactions with a series of larger systemic influences from family peers neighbors and teachers to schools media institutions and culture the book creates a cohesive overview of modern family life and helps students visualize the complex influences affecting all people in families. It also examines the state of modern families using a strengths based approach which allows students to evaluate the health and functioning of a family considering the biological and cultural milieu in which it exists rather than on its observable structure or appearance alone. Individual chapters cover historical and cultural trends and also explore the biological personal and social forces that shape individuals and families. Each chapter investigates the wide diversity of human relationships and integrates discussions of ethnicity culture sexual orientation and gender seamlessly into the main narrative. In addition the book explores recent research in neuroscience medicine and biopsychology to examine how family relationships are shaped by and also influence individuals biological functioning. An accessible writing style coupled with numerous student friendly pedagogical features help readers come to a multi layered understanding of what makes families tick while also challenging them to reevaluate their own assumptions and experiences. Key features: Uses a bioecological model that takes into account our status as both biological and social beings. Employs a strengths based approach that focuses on family processes rather than structure in evaluating families optimal health and happiness. Incorporates discussion of neuroscience medicine and biopsychological research throughout. Explores a wide diversity of family relationships integrating issues of ethnicity culture sexual orientation and gender. Focus on my Family boxes profile real families who wrote essays in their own words about their diverse experiences. How Would You Measure That sections emphasize students critical thinking and analysis of research design and conclusions Helps students analyze their own families strengths and attempt to build on those through psychometrically sound self assessments and Building Your Strengths exercises Engaging and accessible writing style incorporates contemporary real world examples with important theory and research Instructor's manual test bank PowerPoint lecture slides and useful web links as well as Student flash cards and self test questions available upon publication at www.wiley.com/go/howe

Adult Attachment, Conflict Style, and Relationship Satisfaction Keli Ryan

Steuber, 2005 The purpose of this study was to create a comprehensive model integrating adult attachment style conflict style and relationship satisfaction. The research sought to determine if adult attachment acted as a predictor of conflict style and if attachment style mediated by conflict style influenced relationship satisfaction. Three hundred and twenty one undergraduate students in romantic relationships (n = 321) completed questionnaires measuring attachment style, relational conflict style and relationship satisfaction. Results indicated that highly avoidant individuals are more likely to engage in hostile relational conflict with their partners and feel significantly less satisfaction from their adult romantic relationships than their non-avoidant counterparts. Data also suggested that avoidance and hostility may be more influential on relationship satisfaction levels than anxiety and validation. The model in the current study complements romantic conflict research by offering a predictor for conflict styles in dating relationships and illustrating the influence of both attachment style and conflict style on romantic relationship satisfaction.

The Relationship Between Adult Attachment Style and Styles of Conflict

Resolution in Romantic Relationships Iris Wendi Fischer, 1993 Zero to Three, 2002 The Relationship of Adult Attachment Style and Interactive Conflict Styles to Marital Satisfaction Anne Katherine Crowley, 2010 This study examined the association between individual attachment and interactive conflict styles and the overall influence on marital satisfaction in 207 married individuals. The application of attachment theory to this study of adult romantic relationships was established via factor analysis and yielded two dimensions: self anxiety and other avoidance. Accommodation and demand withdraw were the two forms of conflict interaction studied, which respectively are constructive and destructive styles of engagement that impact marital satisfaction. Individuals completed self-report measures of attachment, accommodation, demand withdraw and global marital satisfaction. The current study yielded statistically significant results and supported all of the research hypotheses. There were negative relationships found between the attachment dimensions of anxiety and avoidance and total accommodation, while positive relationships were determined between both attachment dimensions and demand withdraw behaviors. In relationship to marital satisfaction, an individual's total accommodation was positively related, while demand withdraw behaviors were inversely associated. There were also inverse relationships found between both the attachment dimensions and marital satisfaction. These findings suggest that the data are consistent with previous research on attachment, accommodation, demand withdraw behavior and marital satisfaction. In addition to supporting prior findings, this study also had several unique contributions. A statistically significant relationship was found between the constructive and destructive conflict styles, which suggested total accommodation was associated with lower levels of demand withdraw. In addition, a path model for the variables of attachment, accommodation, demand withdraw and marital satisfaction was developed. This display of variables is especially useful in showing the bidirectionality of constructive and destructive behaviors in marriage. Research implications for these findings are presented and suggestions for future research are discussed.
