the authors situated in the growing international literature Transforming Teacher Education puts these questions in cultural and historical context and offers a practical answer in the form of an original agenda for the transformation of current conditions in teacher education with future designs for practice Viv Ellis and Jane McNicholl argue that teacher education needs to be transformed so as to take advantage of the unique structural connections that exist between schools and universities in countries like England represented by the notion of partnership and the USA with the example of professional development schools by capitalising on the networks of expertise within and between these different organisations to produce powerful new forms of knowledge They offer suggestions for future designs for teacher education drawing not only on the latest research in teacher learning and development but from across the social sciences

Weekly ,2007 The New York Times Magazine ,2009 Experimenting with Social Norms Jean Ensminger,Joseph Henrich,2014-10-22 Questions about the origins of human cooperation have long puzzled and divided scientists Social norms that foster fair minded behavior altruism and collective action undergird the foundations of large scale human societies but we know little about how these norms develop or spread or why the intensity and breadth of human cooperation varies among different populations What is the connection between social norms that encourage fair dealing and economic growth How are these social norms related to the emergence of centralized institutions Informed by a pioneering set of cross cultural data Experimenting with Social Norms advances our understanding of the evolution of human cooperation and the expansion of complex societies Editors Jean Ensminger and Joseph Henrich present evidence from an exciting collaboration between anthropologists and economists Using experimental economics games researchers examined levels of fairness cooperation and norms for punishing those who violate expectations of equality across a diverse swath of societies from hunter gatherers in Tanzania to a small town in rural Missouri These experiments tested individuals willingness to conduct mutually beneficial transactions with strangers that reap rewards only at the expense of taking a risk on the cooperation of others The results show a robust relationship between exposure to market economies and social norms that benefit the group over narrow economic self interest Levels of fairness and generosity are generally higher among individuals in communities with more integrated markets Religion also plays a powerful role Individuals practicing either Islam or Christianity exhibited a stronger sense of fairness possibly because religions with high moralizing deities equipped with ample powers to reward and punish encourage greater prosociality The size of the settlement also had an impact People in larger communities were more willing to punish unfairness compared to those in smaller societies Taken together the volume supports the hypothesis that social norms evolved over thousands of years to allow strangers in more complex and large settlements to coexist trade and prosper Innovative and ambitious Experimenting with Social Norms synthesizes an unprecedented analysis of social behavior from an immense range of human societies The fifteen case studies analyzed in this volume which include field experiments in Africa South America New Guinea Siberia and the United States are available for free download on the
