Levels of Project Management Maturity	Level 1	Level 2	Level 3	Level 4	Level 5
	Initial Process	Structured Process and Standards	Organizational Standards and Institutionalized Process	Managed Process	Optimized Process
Project Integration Management	No established practices, standards, or Project Office. Work performed in ad hoc fashion.	Basic, documented processes for project planning and reporting. Management only involved on high-visibility projects.	Project integration efforts institutionalized with procedures and standards. Project Office beginning to integrate project data.	Processes and standards utilized by all projects and integrated with other corporate processes/systems. Decisions based on performance metrics.	Project integration improvement procedures utilized. Lessons learned regularly examined and used to improve documented processes.
Project Scope Management	General statement of business requirements. Little/no scope management or documentation. Management aware of key milestones only.	Basic scope management process in place. Scope management techniques regularly applied on large, more visible projects.	Full project management process documented and utilized by most projects. Stakeholders actively participating in scope decisions.	Project management processes used on all projects. Projects managed and evaluated in light of other projects.	Effectiveness and efficiency metrics drive project scope decisions by appropriate levels of management. Focus on high utilization of value.
Project Time Management	No established planning or scheduling standards. Lack of documentation makes it difficult to achieve repeatable project success.	Basic processes exist but not required for planning and scheduling. Standard scheduling approaches utilized for large, visible projects.	Time management processes documented and utilized by most projects. Organization-wide integration includes inter-project dependencies.	Time management utilizes historical data to forecast future performance. Management decisions based on efficiency and effectiveness metrics.	Improvement procedures utilized for time management processes. Lessons learned are examined and used to improve documented processes.
Project Cost Management	No established practices or standards. Cost process documentation is ad hoc and individual project teams follow informal practices.	Processes exist for cost estimating, reporting, and performance measurement. Cost management processes are used for large, visible projects.	Cost processes are organizational standard and utilized by most projects. Costs are fully integrated into project office resource library.	Cost planning and tracking integrated with Project Office, financial, and human resources systems. Standards tied to corporate processes.	Lessons learned improve documented processes. Management actively uses efficiency and effectiveness metrics for decision-making.
Project Quality Management	No established project quality practices or standards. Management is considering how they should define "quality."	Basic organizational project quality policy has been adopted. Management encourages quality policy application on large, visible projects.	Quality process is well documented and an organizational standard. Management involved in quality oversight for most projects.	All projects required to use quality planning standard processes. The Project Office coordinates quality standards and assurance.	The quality process includes guidelines for feeding improvements back into the process. Metrics are key to product quality decisions.
Project Human Resource Management	No repeatable process applied to planning and staffing projects. Project teams are ad hoc. Human resource time and cost is not measured.	Repeatable process in place that defines how to plan and manage the human resources. Resource tracking for highly visible projects only.	Most projects follow established resource management process. Professional development program establishes project management career path.	Resource forecasts used for project planning and prioritization. Project team performance measured and integrated with career development.	Process engages teams to document project lessons learned. Improvements are incorporated into human resources management process.
