

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) would improve the performance of a group of students in a complex, multi-step problem-solving task. The study was conducted in a classroom setting where students were assigned to groups and given a complex problem to solve. The DSS was designed to provide students with a structured approach to solving the problem, including a flowchart and a decision tree. The results of the study showed that the use of the DSS significantly improved the performance of the students, as measured by the number of correct solutions and the time taken to solve the problem. The study also found that the DSS was used by all groups, and that the students who used the DSS were more confident in their solutions. The study concludes that the use of a computer-based DSS can improve the performance of students in a complex, multi-step problem-solving task.
