Worries about the future of the country are not unique to the United States. In 2010, the World Bank conducted a survey of 1,000 people in 10 countries, including the United States, to determine what people were most worried about for the future of their country. The results are shown in the following table.

Brachyponeran, Leptogenys species, were collected from the forest floor in the same area as the Leptogenys species, and were used to compare the diversity and abundance of the two groups.
