Healthy Aging Comparison Reviews:

Promoting Healthy Aging Across the Lifespan Elena Carrillo-Alvarez, Miriam Rodriguez-Monforte, Jordi Vilaró, Katherine Simone McGilton, 2024-12-26 Worldwide there is a generalized trend toward aged societies. Between 2015 and 2050 the proportion of the world's population over 60 years will nearly double from 12% to 22%. As life expectancy continues to increase and natality rates lower not only the composition of countries will change but also its health landscape. However an increased life expectancy does not necessarily mean a healthy life. In most high income countries more than 20% of those years are lived in ill health due to chronic conditions caused by non-communicable diseases which compromises functional ability and well-being key components of healthy aging. In this way not only people's lives but also societal structures are being affected. Based on the life course approach to healthy aging aging starts from conception. In this regard the promotion of healthy aging requires preventive strategies that enhance capacities during growth and development, maintain them for as long as possible after maturity and slow down their rate of decline. Moreover considering healthy aging across the lifespan entails focusing on different factors life opportunities and choices that might significantly influence health status, lifestyle as well as health and social inequalities in older age and challenges the focus of most research on the topic which exclusively investigates the effect of influences operating in the later stages of life.

Annual Review of Gerontology and Geriatrics, Volume 33, 2013 Jean-Marie Robine, Carol Jagger, Eileen Crimmins, 2013-02-20 Developed countries and certain regions of economically emerging nations have been displaying a rapidly growing population of the oldest old nonagenarians, centenarians, and supercentenarians. As this trend continues we must redirect some of our research on aging to the experience of advanced old age and discovering individual and community factors that improve the quality of life during this life stage. This state of the science multidisciplinary Annual provides a comprehensive discussion of the factors promoting healthy survival and/or ensuring a good quality of life for the oldest elderly. It features an international representation that includes Denmark, Finland, France, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, Sweden, Japan, and North America. The Annual disseminates the most current research regarding this population and notes gaps in our knowledge. The book addresses ongoing demographic, epidemiological, and social changes regarding longevity, estimates of oldest old populations, and prevalence of chronic and degenerative diseases, frailty, and old age dependency. The meaning of healthy longevity as a theoretical concept is explored. Grounded in the fundamental issue of whether or not the prevalence of poor health or poor quality of life inevitably increases with age, recent research and ongoing studies from a variety of perspectives are presented from several nations. The book clarifies the known and hypothetical factors favoring healthy longevity from genes to social integration. Additionally, chapters explore gender differences in age trajectories and changes over time. Special attention is given to the social and cognitive dimensions of
