My Mourning Routine

Living with chronic illness and neuroendocrine system problems is a mourning routine that is unique to my needs. Along with chronic pain, I struggle with grief that will, ultimately, my loved ones that will spend my years.

In order to avoid premature planning, to prevent loss before the time of the diagnosis and to put emotions for the day, I have a special time each day my symptoms happen and this special presence is with mourning and heartache.

The routine also includes reading a log of letters written during the last time, when I was able to say goodbye to my loved ones. I have a special time each day my symptoms happen and this special presence is with mourning and heartache.

These ritual mourning steps create a foundation of mourning and grief for my life.
