

Todos os Mercados (TM) and a day in the life of Henri Trouv  ,
Tuesday 26 January 2016

06:32, Henri Trouv   is driving to work. He is already tired. Last night he studied late at an MBA class. He hoped the qualification would lead to a better job or promotion. He is miserable and reflects on why this is.

In 1965, his father set up a small hardware business in St Laurent, near Tillois in southern France. The business was set up as a sole trader. His father made personal customer service, especially free delivery to customers' homes and workplaces, the unique selling point (USP) of the business. As a child, Henri helped his parents at the store and worked there when he finished school. At 32, when his parents retired, he became the owner and manager of the business for what he thought would be the rest of his working life. However, two years later that all changed. Todos os Mercados (TM), a South American multinational company (MNC), opened a TM hypermarket just outside St Laurent. TM is a public limited company. TM's hypermarket had a huge impact on the Trouv   business as it could not compete with it. The Trouv   business went into liquidation when Henri failed to attract any external sources of finance.

Desperate and with no income, Henri applied to work at TM. He was appointed manager of the hardware section. The job title was more impressive than the job itself – he was little more than a salesperson with minimal management responsibility.

TM's stated main aim, based on its mission statement and expressed in all of its promotional material, is to have the lowest prices in the market. TM uses lean production methods including just-in-time (JIT) and outsourcing to cut the cost of sales. TM also keeps wages to a minimum and strictly controls all aspects of employee performance. These approaches enable TM to sell goods at much lower prices than its competitors. The rest of TM's marketing mix supports its low-price strategy. As TM grew, it was able to impose more favourable purchasing terms from suppliers, which allowed TM to lower its prices even further. High market share and market leadership are important for TM.

Historically, TM has used internal growth. TM's attempts at external growth through franchising were unsuccessful. TM opened new stores both in France and in many other regions around the world. It expanded the range of goods it sold and eventually entered the services market. Now every TM store sells hardware, home appliances, electronics, furniture, automotive parts and office supplies. TM has recently started offering banking facilities, insurance, pharmacies, opticians and mobile phone services. TM is truly a "one stop" shopping destination and is successful in many regions of the world. It is actively investigating development of new markets in Asia.

TM has a regimented autocratic and centralized approach to human resource management. Employees are not empowered and have to follow detailed work instructions and procedures produced at headquarters in South America. Strict practices prevent employees talking to each other while at work, and unscheduled breaks are not allowed. Employees who complain find themselves in trouble. TM has an inflexible organizational structure. In 2013, labour turnover at the hypermarket in St Laurent was much lower than expected. This was due to the economic recession which meant that there were few employment opportunities in the local area.
