

Astronautics PathFinder Autopilots... a complete family of rate-stabilized systems that can grow as your needs grow!

DURING THE YEAR following their first certification, nearly 100 models of General Aviation aircraft were certificated with PathFinder autopilots. Certifications continue at a rate which verifies their easy accommodation of widely varying flight characteristics. One of the keys to this versatility is the use of rate-stabilization (in lieu of traditional attitude control systems) to duplicate most closely the way pilots actually fly. That is, the amount of control exerted by a pilot is normally determined by the rate at which the airplane deviates from the desired attitude.

The essence of rate stabilization is its ability to "predict" directly the amount of corrective control that will be required to restore the original attitude... and to provide it without over-reacting! In all PathFinder systems, this prediction is based on rate-gyro signals, without waiting for the actual deviation to accumulate. As a result, most of an impending deviation will be prevented rather than corrected; and that means stable flight.

Alternative methods to achieve this speed of response would be to increase the sensitivity to small attitude changes (which could cause instability), or to compute that rate of attitude change (which is more complex and costly than the use of rate-gyro outputs). In short, rate-stabilized PathFinder autopilots utilize the simplest, most economical means to fly your aircraft the way you fly yourself (on your better days), stabilizing your General Aviation aircraft with techniques employed in the most advanced airline and military autopilots!

Modularity in PathFinder autopilots permits the addition of control axes and features to meet your initial or growing requirements; but modularity has economic and quality implications as well. The use of the same roll/yaw rate gyros, servo amplifiers and "force servo" motors in all PathFinder systems... and the same pitch rate gyro in all 3-axis systems... increased the quality level achievable within realistic General Aviation budgets... without sacrificing ARINC-compatible interfaces and TSO's, which are marks of truly professional equipment.

Reliability of PathFinder systems comes in part from their solid-state control circuitry and well-cooled servo amplifiers. It comes as well from their use of "force servo" motors which closely match the speeds and forces of normal manual control without troublesome gear trains and clutches used by conventional high-speed motors to approximate these characteristics. Result: Primary maintenance items in conventional systems simply do not exist in PathFinder autopilots!

Every PathFinder system is "pre-flown" on test and burn-in racks for 24 hours before it is released for installation. This practice virtually eliminates a familiar problem with solid-state systems; i.e., "infant mortality." If electrical/electronic problems occur in such solid-state systems, they usually occur immediately after installation! Clearly, it makes more sense to find potential problems at the factory where the remedy is easily prescribed and effected.

HOW MUCH AUTOPILOT DO YOU NEED? When you decide, you will find it easy to select every feature you require from the following pages, and still end up with a PathFinder system! As a bonus, you can add other features at a later date as your budget or your needs change (very useful if you sell your aircraft some day to a pilot with different requirements!).
