Susan Polk, 2013-01-08 Stress is a normal part of life but not everyone has the ability to manage it properly. One of the main problems with health is stress. Many people deal with health problems just because of stress. This is the reason why managing stress is so important. Managing stress can be dealt with in many ways. Talking about the problems you are experiencing with friends, loved ones, or a professional can often be a great help. Keeping everything bottled up will only create more problems later on and often cause stress-related health problems. Managing stress doesn't have to include a trip to a therapist. In fact, many people who are able to conquer their stress have found other more enjoyable ways to do so. Sometimes overcoming stress just takes a little more creativity and some time off for your brain. When you are able to change the way you are looking at your life and relaxing your body at the same time, stress doesn't have to cause any worry. In fact, you might find that stress is more under your control than you may have realized. Stopping stress can even be fun. Information and Resources to Help You Through the Pork Crisis, 1999
