Medical Anthropology And The World System Critical Perspectives:

Medical Anthropology and the World System Hans A. Baer, Merrill Singer, Ida Susser, 2013 Medical anthropology is one of the youngest and most dynamic of anthropology's various subdisciplines. Critical medical anthropology has evolved into one of the major perspectives through which faculty and students study the field. It examines health-related issues in precapitalist indigenous and state societies, capitalist societies, and postrevolutionary or socialist-oriented societies. While critical medical anthropology draws heavily on neo-Marxian critical and world systems theoretical perspectives, it attempts to incorporate the theoretical contributions of other systems in medical anthropology, including biocultural or medical ecology, ethnomedical approaches, cultural constructivism, poststructuralism, and postmodernism. This is the first textbook to incorporate this perspective. The first part of the book is a discussion of the central concepts in and the development and scope of medical anthropology, as well as the critical perspective employed. The second part explores health and the environment, as well as the social origins of specific health problems. A third part highlights the diversity of medical systems in different societies, and a fourth part argues for a merger of theory and social action. Publisher's description. Medical Anthropology and the World System Hans A. Baer, 2006

Medical Anthropology and the World System Hans A. Baer, 2003

Recent Advances in Indian Medical Anthropology P.C. Joshi, Chakraverti Mahajan, 2021-01-01 Medical Anthropology is one of the fastest growing sub-disciplines of anthropology. At a time when traditional medicines and alternative and complementary medicines are creating an important space within the domain of health care, medical anthropology with its specialized methodology and holistic perspective is becoming a crucial subject. In Indian context, the creation of a separate Ministry of AYUSH and importance given to traditional knowledge in the field of medicines has necessitated that the scattered knowledge located in the remote tribal and isolated rural areas be compiled and consolidated. This volume provides multifaceted insights into the current research in Medical Anthropology in India. Providing inputs from seasoned as well as budding anthropologists, it discusses the issues of disciplinary discourses, healing strategies, mental health, and well-being, gender and health, and health policy in diverse contexts.

Exploring Medical Anthropology Donald Joralemon, 2017-03-16 Now in its fourth edition, Exploring Medical Anthropology provides a concise and engaging introduction to medical anthropology. It presents competing theoretical perspectives in a balanced fashion, highlighting points of conflict and convergence. Concrete examples and the author's personal research experiences are utilized to explain some of the discipline's most important insights, such as that biology and culture matter equally in the human experience of disease and that medical anthropology can help to alleviate human suffering. The text has been thoroughly updated for the fourth edition, including fresh case studies and a new chapter on drugs. It contains a range of pedagogical features to support teaching and learning, including images, text boxes, a glossary, and suggested further reading. Humanity & Society, 1998

Climate Change and Capitalism in Australia Hans A. Baer, 2021-09-30 Recognizing that climate politics has been an increasingly contentious and heated topic in Australia over the past two decades this book examines Australian capitalism as a driver of climate change and the nexus between the corporations and Coalition and Australian Labor parties As a highly developed country Australia is punching above its weight in terms of contributing to greenhouse gas emissions despite rising temperatures droughts water shortages and raging bushfires storm surges and flooding and the bleaching of the Great Barrier Reef Drawing upon both archival and ethnographic research Hans Baer examines Australian climate politics at the margins namely the Greens the labour union the environmental NGOs and the grass roots climate movement Adopting a climate justice perspective which calls for system change not climate change as opposed to the conventional approach of seeking to mitigate emissions through market mechanisms and techno fixes particularly renewable energy sources this book posits system challenging transitional steps to shift Australia toward an eco socialist vision in keeping with a burgeoning global socio ecological revolution Accessibly written and including an interview with renowned comedian and climate activist Rod Quantock OAM this book is essential reading for academics students and general readers with an interest in climate change and climate activism

Health and Healing in Comparative Perspective Elizabeth Dixon Whitaker, 2006 This reader provides both fascinating comparative ethnographic detail and a theoretical framework for organizing and interpreting information about health While there are many health related fields represented in this book its core discipline is medical anthropology and its main focus is the comparative approach Cross cultural comparison gives anthropological analysis breadth while the evolutionary time scale gives it depth These two features have always been fundamental to anthropology and continue to distinguish it among the social sciences A third feature is the in depth knowledge of culture produced by anthropological methods such as participant observation involving long term presence in and research among a study population The first part of the book explores healing systems in different cultures the second and third provide a strong grounding in evolutionary and culture oriented analysis making clear the connections between biology and culture as they affect health the final part emphasizes case studies that apply the theoretical principles presented earlier to particular

Community Health Organizing and the Political Economy of Health Care in Morelos, Mexico Suzanne D. Schneider, 2006
This dissertation analyzes the emergence of a community based alternative health care movement in Morelos Mexico and its local expressions among health groups in the mestizo town of Zarragoza Influenced by self help approaches cultural revitalization efforts and the global alternative medicine movement health groups in this study run community clinics natural pharmacies and health promoter training programs in order to make the health care alternatives they offer accessible and affordable to community residents This study explores the work of three health groups in Zarragoza and examines the practices they employ in their community clinics and the discourses that their participants advocate The study situates local health organizing efforts in the context of global and national health policies that influence paradigms governing formal health care distribution and health sector reforms in Mexico Specifically it explores the strategies of local health groups as a response to the government's inadequate efforts to provide health for all and to alleviate health care shortages in the face of socioeconomic challenges that many Mexicans experience The study also examines health organizing as a response to perceived limitations of biomedicine as the population ages and the burden of chronic illnesses accelerates the deterioration of an underfunded public health system As health care protection decreases under neoliberal state reforms health groups advocate a new way of doing health care that emphasizes patient participation in illness prevention health education and the attainment of medical care outside of government health structures This dissertation merges critical and political economy approaches in medical anthropology with actor oriented frameworks By considering how the agendas of health groups reflect local and global trends the study contributes to the medical anthropology literature by furthering our understanding of the global and syncretic nature of medical pluralism This dissertation also contributes a case study to the scarce literature on social movements in health offering new perspectives on how communities most specifically women are interacting with a myriad of global and national pressures to contribute solutions to local problems concerning health care By detailing local perspectives and grounding the project in issues of political economy this research offers new insights into local understandings of health care that may be overlooked in government health planning and the implementation of development programs

Mexican Community Health and the Politics of Health Reform Suzanne D. Schneider, 2010-06-15 The struggle of Mexicans to secure quality health care is the focal point of this study Large scale transformations in Mexico s national health care system have resulted in budget cuts increased user fees and decreased public services At the local level community based health groups that practice popular medicine are addressing the challenge by training health promoters in a variety of preventive and healing practices and offering low cost services in community clinics Their health care approach integrates local and global practices ranging from Mexican herbalism to Chinese medicine Suzanne Schneider s ethnographic study of grassroots health groups in Morelos Mexico addresses the lives of the participants and the groups contributions to community health What draws women to these groups Are they reacting to their experiences with formal health care To what extent are the groups teachings applied in the household and accepted throughout the community Does group participation offer women new sources of empowerment or avenues to income generation Does the government support these groups How do they fit into larger trends of health care reform and the shift toward privatization Taking a political economic approach

Schneider examines the conditions under which community based health groups are emerging and explores the ways different constituencies address health dilemmas She delineates future roles for new participants in health care new models of community health and a new medical pluralism
