The author explains the history of bodyweight standards, details the emotional and physical consequences of being overweight and explores the various treatment and prevention plans for obesity. In reviewing the numerous psychological theories that explain people's problems with weight, Stroebe points out that each does not take into consideration the desire for palatable food. He then presents the goal conflict theory which assumes that chronic dieters who have difficulties in controlling their weight often disregard bodily cues of hunger and satiety not because they are unable to recognize them but because they do not want to recognize them. Nutrition and the Adult Roslyn B. Alfin-Slater, David Kritchevsky, 1980 The science of nutrition has advanced beyond expectation since Antoine La Voirier as early as the 18th century showed that oxygen was necessary to change nutrients in foods to compounds which would become a part of the human body. He was also the first to measure metabolism and to show that oxidation within the body produces heat and energy. In the two hundred years that have elapsed the essentiality of nitrogen containing nutrients and of proteins for growth and maintenance of tissue has been established. The necessity for carbohydrates and certain types of fat for health has been documented vitamins necessary to prevent deficiency diseases have been identified and isolated and the requirement of many mineral elements for health has been demonstrated Further investigations have defined the role of these nutrients in metabolic processes and quantitated their requirements at various stages of development Additional studies have involved their use in the possible prevention of and therapy for disease conditions
