Comparison of Major Construction Projects and Offshore Hydrocarbon Developments in Atlantic Canada Atlantic

Consulting Economists Limited, Environmental Studies Revolving Funds (Canada), 1985 Offshore oil and gas development in Atlantic Canada will involve construction of onshore facilities as well as onshore construction of structures for offshore installation. These activities will generate substantial levels of employment and may have significant impacts on communities in the Atlantic provinces. This report attempts to provide a frame of reference for assessing the scale and implications of such projects. It contains a body of data allowing direct comparisons among recent major construction projects familiar to Atlantic province residents such as oil refineries and power plants and the proposed Venture and Hibernia offshore developments. Included in the comparative data considered relevant for developing the frame of reference are project schedules, capital costs, employment requirements and social impacts. The report also contains descriptive profiles of each of the projects.
