These are the only differences that are statistically significant by treatment when using the Pfeifer et al. (2004) procedure. The model results were then compared by a paired sample  $t$ -test. Results showed that the  $t$ -test was significant at the 99.99% level. This indicates that the model results, application and outcome were more significant than the control. However, changes were not been shown from the control group to the other three treatment group changes. The changes are more of the same kind between different groups.
