Liss, 1977 A possible form of a theory of exploitation of fish populations was examined The exploitation theory was derived from a theory of community dynamics that represents the interactions between populations in a biological community with complex interrelated systems of isoclines on phase planes The isocline systems are deduced with a graphical calculus from response functions that represent the biological characteristics of each of the interacting populations The time invariant systems of isoclines and the response functions from which they are deduced underlie determine and so explain time variant population performances A fish population was defined as a member of a simple community Isocline systems were deduced to represent and provide an integrated explanation of the effects of the following factors on the dynamics and persistence of the fish populations changes in the levels of environmental factors such as light energy and fishing effort competition for food with another fish population and foraging by the fish population on two prey species The impact of these factors on the magnitude and form of the recruitment production and yield curves of the fish population was also determined In general increases in light energy input rate and other environmental factors such as plant nutrients and the addition of another prey species to the diet of the fish population were found to increase the magnitude of these curves Competition reduced their magnitude With the theoretical approach developed here causal deterministic explanations of the dynamics of exploited fish populations can be developed These explanations couple the dynamics of the fish population to the dynamics of other populations in the biological community and to external environmental factors This approach thus permits broad understanding of the performances of exploited fish populations as they interact with their co extensive environmental systems Proceedings of the Fourth Berkeley Symposium on Mathematical Statistics and Probability Jerzy Neyman, 1961 Advances in Fisheries Science Andrew I. L. Payne, John Cotter, Ted Potter, 2009-01-22 This timely book brings readers up to date on the wide range of advances made in fisheries science since the publication in 1957 of On the Dynamics of Exploited Fish Populations

Beverton and Holt regarded by many fisheries scientists as one of the most important books on fisheries yet published. Traditional fishery subjects covered include historic declines and changes in fishing fleets, fisheries management and stock assessments, data poor situations, simulation and modelling of fished stocks, fisheries economics, assessing reproductive potential and dispersal of larvae, fisheries for sharks and rays and use of marine technology. Additionally, related subjects of increasing importance now that ecological approaches to management are coming to the fore are presented. They include benthic ecology, ecosystem changes linked to fishing, life history theory, the effects of chemicals on fish reproduction and use of sounds in the sea by marine life. Several chapters offer stimulating philosophical discussion of the many controversial areas still existing. This significant book, edited by Andy Payne, John Cotter and Ted Potter and containing contributions by world renowned fisheries scientists including many based at Cefas where Beverton and Holt's original work was carried out, is an essential purchase for fisheries managers and scientists, fish biologists, marine scientists and ecologists. Libraries in all universities and research establishments where fisheries and biological sciences are studied and taught are likely to need copies of this landmark publication.
