the city itself while celebrating New York as both a place and an idea Detroit Never Left Nicole E. Trujillo-Pagán, 2026-03-03 A new perspective on the relationship between race and space in Detroit Detroit seemed to experience an explosive rebirth following its bankruptcy the largest in US municipal history It was as if the slate had been wiped clean and the color line erased in the nation's largest Black city Detroit Never Left explains the relation between racism and space by analyzing the ways opportunities changed in the years leading up to and following bankruptcy Based on a variety of data including in depth interviews with people who identify as Latina/o/x in their early 20s ethnographic observation and media coverage Nicole E Trujillo Pagán shows how a dialectic between empty and concrete abstractions created new opportunities for outside investment often at the expense of residents' fortunes She reveals space is much more than a neutral backdrop It is continually produced through abstractions that act like bordering and crossing practices to control resources and opportunities With broad implications for analyses of space and opportunity Detroit Never Left tackles important contradictions in the post bankruptcy city For example urban youth do not want to be moved out or isolated in their barrio Similarly many Detroiters feel spatial changes happen to instead of for them Ultimately residents' concerns underscored broader tensions between democratic inclusion and racialized capitalism Saturday Review of Literature, 1951 New York, 1994 Old-House Journal, 1983-06 Old House Journal is the original magazine devoted to restoring and preserving old houses For more than 35 years our mission has been to help old house owners repair, restore, update and decorate buildings of every age and architectural style Each issue explores hands on restoration techniques, practical architectural guidelines, historical overviews and homeowner stories all in a trusted, authoritative voice American Cinematographer, 1988 Trestle Board of New York, 1925 Electrical Review, 1892 NYLA Bulletin New York Library Association, 1969
