Waterworks pointed to prior discussions it had with the agency. These may have taken place before the agency's decision to issue the permit, but prior discussions do not affect the agency's authority to issue the permit. The agency's decision to issue the permit is a final agency action, and provides a taxpayer with a final agency decision that is binding on the agency. Because the law requires a taxpayer to make a permit application to receive a permit, it will require the agency to issue, administer, and if need arises, take back a permit, or require another person to make a permit application.

These additional requirements concern both the structure of the house and the function of the house in society. In this context the structure of the house is defined as a house that is used, occupied, or maintained, regardless of the nature of the residence, and according to the intention of the owner. Thus, a house that is unoccupied, or is used as a workshop, or is used as a storage place for household goods, is also a house. Thus, a house that is used as a workshop, or is used as a storage place for household goods, is also a house. Thus, a house that is used as a workshop, or is used as a storage place for household goods, is also a house.
