Schein, 2017-12-16 Excerpt from Organizational Socialization in the Early Career of Industrial Managers If we maintain the perspective of the organization or society we can see that the need to convert members citizens to a new ideology and to root out resistance or sabotage is a problem which many organizations face notably prisons hospitals rehabilitative institutions and to some degree industrial organizations Particularly with respect to new members coming into the organization it is essential that they be taught the organization goals values and preferred ways of dealing with problems New members must also be taught to be loyal and productive which is tantamount to saying that they must accept the ideology participate actively About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works Organizational Socialization: A Social Learning Interpretation Fred Luthans, Tim R. Perrewe, NEBRASKA UNIV LINCOLN DEPT OF MANAGEMENT., 1982 Organizational socialization the process by which an employee learns the appropriate norms and required behaviors to participate and become part of the organization has arrived as an extremely important dimension to the study of organizational behavior Although there are a number of existing approaches to socialization they lack a clear theoretical basis for understanding and application This paper proposes a social learning theoretical framework Particular attention is given to the relevancy that modeling and self control can have for organizational socialization Specific examples of how these concepts and techniques can help facilitate the successful socialization of new and existing employees are included throughout Organizational Psychology Steve M. Socialization in the Workplace Susan J. Gilpatric, 1999 A Control Perspective of Organizational Socialization Robin Zenger Baker, 1990 Organizational Socialization Tactics, Proximal Socialization Outcomes, and Distal Socialization Outcomes Tae-Yeol Kim, Sang-Pyo Kim, 2015 The past organizational socialization studies have devoted their attention to examining how organizational socializations affect various individual outcomes Although they have provided useful insights on organizational socialization they have generally failed to examine the processes by which organizational socialization tactics affect various socialization outcomes In addition Jones 1986 provided a 3 factor conceptualization of socialization tactics i e context content and social aspects which is conceptually richer and allows for greater hypothesis testing regarding specific classes of socialization tactics than a single continuum However only Cable and Parsons 2001 used the framework to examine the relationship between organizational socialization and person organization fit P O fit To address these limitations this study investigated the effects of the 3 factor conceptualization of socialization tactics on socialization outcomes based on the process model proposed by Saks and Ashforth 1997 According to Saks and Ashforth socialization tactics are predicted to result in proximal socialization outcomes that are more directly affected by organizational socialization than others Proximal socialization outcomes are then expected to influence a wide variety of more distal socialization outcomes That is proximal socialization outcomes mediate the relationship between organizational socialization and distal socialization outcomes In this study we examined how person organization fit and role clarity i e proximal socialization outcomes mediate the relationship between the 3 factor socialization tactics and various distal socialization outcomes i e organization commitment job satisfaction and intention to quit To test this research model we collected data from newcomers whose tenure is between 3 months and 2 years in 9 Korean organizations Based on 347 completed surveys we conducted structural equation modeling analysis using AMOS 4 0 The results show that overall the proposed research model fits to the data well based on various fit indices such as CFI and GFI More specifically significant tests of each path coefficient show that as expected content and social aspects of socialization were positively associated with person organizational fit and role clarity P O fit and role clarity were also significantly associated with three distal socialization outcomes In addition P O fit and role clarity partially mediated the relationship between organizational socialization and the distal socialization outcomes For example person organizational fit and role clarity fully mediated the relationship between content aspect of socialization and organizational commitment and job satisfaction However as unexpected collective socialization i e context aspects of socialization was negatively and significantly associated with P O fit It is possible that when organizations provide the same socializations to newcomers while separating them from the existing employees the newcomers may develop their own subcultures that may deviated from the current organizational culture and values In particular in Korea where generation differences are substantial Inglehart 1990 the negative impact of collective and formal socialization on person organizational fit may be not unusual Thus when organizations use collective and formal socialization tactics i e the context aspect of socialization they have to pay more attentions to clarifying the purpose and the content of the socialization Theoretical and practical implications are discussed

Organizational Socialization, Management Training and Development, and the Measurement of Change Gregory Dela Cruz,1979 Effects of Organizational Socialization Tactics and Newcomers' Proactivity on Socialization Outcomes Tae-Yeol Kim,Sang-Pyo Kim,2015 The past organizational socialization studies have devoted their attention to examining how organizational socializations affect various individual outcomes. Although they have provided useful insights on organizational socialization, they have generally failed to examine the processes by which organizational socialization tactics affect various socialization outcomes. In addition, Jones (1986) provided a 3 factor conceptualization of socialization tactics, i.e., context, content, and social aspects, which is conceptually richer and allows for greater hypothesis testing regarding specific classes of socialization tactics than a single continuum. However, only Cable and Parsons (2001) used the framework to examine the relationship between organizational socialization and person-organization fit (P-O fit). To address these limitations, this study investigated the effects of the 3 factor conceptualization of socialization tactics on socialization outcomes based on the process model proposed by Saks and Ashforth (1997). According to Saks and Ashforth, socialization tactics are predicted to result in proximal socialization outcomes that are more directly affected by organizational socialization than others. Proximal socialization outcomes are then expected to influence a wide variety of more distal socialization outcomes. That is, proximal socialization outcomes mediate the relationship between organizational socialization and distal socialization outcomes. In this study, we examined how person-organization fit and role clarity, i.e., proximal socialization outcomes, mediate the relationship between the 3 factor socialization tactics and various distal socialization outcomes, i.e., organization commitment, job satisfaction, and intention to quit. To test this research model, we collected data from newcomers whose tenure is between 3 months and 2 years in 9 Korean organizations. Based on 347 completed surveys, we conducted structural equation modeling analysis using AMOS 4.0. The results show that overall the proposed research model fits the data well based on various fit indices such as CFI and GFI. More specifically, significant tests of each path coefficient show that, as expected, content and social aspects of socialization were positively associated with person-organizational fit and role clarity. P-O fit and role clarity were also significantly associated with three distal socialization outcomes. In addition, P-O fit and role clarity partially mediated the relationship between organizational socialization and the distal socialization outcomes. For example, person-organizational fit and role clarity fully mediated the relationship between content aspect of socialization and organizational commitment and job satisfaction. However, as unexpected, collective socialization, i.e., context aspects of socialization, was negatively and significantly associated with P-O fit. It is possible that when organizations provide the same socializations to newcomers while separating them from the existing employees, the newcomers may develop their own subcultures that may deviate from the current organizational culture and values. In particular, in Korea, where generation differences are substantial (Inglehart, 1990), the negative impact of collective and formal socialization on person-organizational fit may be not unusual. Thus, when organizations use collective and formal socialization tactics, i.e., the context aspect of socialization, they have to pay more attentions to clarifying the purpose and the content of the socialization. Theoretical and practical implications are discussed.
