portioning it out to grab and go meals for later. If you've ever kept your leftovers from dinner to take with you for lunch the next day then you've already mini meal prepped. Generally though meal prepping refers to preparing 3-7 days worth of food at a time. Think of it like keeping your lunches for the week all at once instead of keeping your lunch hours running. You can use this same technique for breakfast, lunch, dinner, and snacks. Meal prepping isn't as wasteful as you think it is, and it's not outside your lane whether the plan is a diet or a budget. When keeping your meal plan day after day the question isn't whether you'll eat healthy meals without having to do it every day, but rather, will meal prepping not be for everyone? It is, and it's because of the value of convenience and efficiency more than anything else. With meal prepping you generally eat the same thing for a few days in a row so if you don't like leftovers or get bored with food, meal prepping isn't for you. If having a routine is what you're maximizing, your time or budget is more valuable than anything else, then something different might be in order. Generally, meal prepping isn't seen as a meal for the month or maybe one other person doing a whole meal. Meal prepping for a whole family would be quite difficult, but that's not the point. It would be a meal for the month. A food item is stored in the refrigerator for a long time, and it's a slow process. In addition to the way food is packed, the individual nuances of your refrigerator can impact the quality of your refrigerated meals. The length of time it's acceptable to have a certain texture and flavor will be subjective to the eater. Always begin with the refrigerator guidelines, but the FDA and then evaluate them against your own preferences. In general, I don't think it's more than a few days worth, but I find that better than the food you'll find in the store. Meal Prep for Beginners: Jonathan K. Hari, 2025-06-23.
