2. The Origin of Labor Day

The idea of Labor Day came from the labor movement in the 19th century. Some men and women fought for shorter work hours and _____ and _____ working conditions. They began to organize and demand better treatment. Labor unions grew in influence. Labor activists pushed for a national holiday. They wanted recognition for all those who have had some kind of job.

3. There are two men who get credit for the idea of having a holiday. One is Peter McGuire, who thought of it first. Some think it was Peter McGuire. He was a part of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners. He was a city founder of the American Federation of Labor. Others believe it was Matthew Maguire. He was a _____ he was part of the Central Labor Union in New York. Both men had the idea in the year 1882. They were both _____ of the first Labor Day parade in New York City.

4. The first Labor Day was celebrated on Tuesday, September 5, 1882, in New York City. There was a _____ to show the hard work of the community. Then, there was a festival for workers and families to have fun and relax.

5. From then on, the date changed to what about the halfway point between the first of May and the first of September. After the first Labor Day celebration, more states joined in. The following year, the date was made a national holiday. More states continued to join the holiday and the date was made a national holiday.

6. Labor Day is now celebrated in the United States and Canada.
