portioning it out to get good meals for later! If you've ever had your leftovers from dinner to eat at lunch or next day, you've already mini meal prepped! Generally though, meal prepping refers to preparing food in advance for lunches for the week or once instead of cooking fresh every day. You can do this same thing for breakfast, lunch, dinner, and snacks. Meal prepping isn't necessarily a waste and reduces time spent outside the house, whether planning a diet or a budget. When considering a new lifestyle change, one of the first questions people ask is "How much time will I have to spend each day?" Meal prepping isn't for everyone. It's a great value for convenience and efficiency more than anything else. With meal prepping, you generally eat the same things as before, so you don't have to deal with food boredom. If having control over what you eat while maximizing your time and budget is important to you, doing something different every day might be a challenge. Generally, meal prep isn't for everyone, or maybe one other person does it for a whole family. Meal prepping for a whole family would be quite difficult because there are many factors involved. A slow cooker in the kitchen can help with this. In addition to the way food is packed, the individual nuances of your refrigerator can impact the quality of refrigerated meals. The smell of the refrigerator is also an important factor. Will everybody who eats begin with the refrigerator guidelines set by the FDA and then vote on their own preferences? In general, I don't think it's more than a few days' worth of food until I find that balance. That's why I found this book.
