values influenced user behaviors on TikTok Douyin Using Hofstede's Cultural Dimensions as a theoretical framework this study investigates the impact of cultural differences on the gender fit expectation and influencers endorsement effectiveness product attitude and purchase intention between China and the U S An online survey was conducted in each country In general Chinese participants were more likely to be persuaded by influencers to make purchase decisions than US participants Unexpectedly Chinese participants claimed a higher individualism score and a lower power distance score than US participants which contradicts with Hofstede's original cultural scores for each country The findings supported that participants gender fit expectations positively predicted influencers endorsement effectiveness and Chinese users were more influenced than the U S users Besides the influencer's expertise product congruency and gender congruency impacted people's product attitudes and purchase intentions independently for the gendered product and expertise congruency was less influential than gender congruency The impact of influencers varies by consumers gender influencers gender and consumers age In both countries old users were more easily persuaded than young users Male influencers more influenced the US TikTok users both male and female In China female influencers were more persuasive than male influencers among male and female Douyin users Therefore marketing practitioners should consider the demographic characteristics and user preferences of TikTok and Douyin for their marketing practices In addition the study confirmed that cultural values influenced users TikTok Douyin use in some conditions especially their gender values Hence marketers should consider consumers gender expectations and gender influence as well This is the first study to compare TikTok Douyin use between the U S and China The study enhances our understanding of Hofstede's cultural dimensions theory Furthermore it demonstrates helpful and detailed information on the general platform use and how it is influenced by the cultural differences between the two countries
