

Figure 2. A graph and its adjacency matrix.

The adjacency matrix,  $A$ , of a graph,  $G$  with  $|V|$  vertices may be defined as  $[A_{ij}]$  for  $[V]$  matrix,  $A = [a_{ij}]$ , whose entries are  $a_{ij}$  such that the entry,  $a_{ij} = 1$  if vertices  $i$  and  $j$  are joined by an edge for  $j$  vertices in  $G$ , and 0 if otherwise. (Bollobás et al., 1998). Other common graphs include: complete (all edges present), disconnected (no cycles present), and spanning trees (graphs connecting all vertices).

2. Aggregation and Graph Theory for Networks Problems

The graph theory allows for the configuration of some basic networks and the reconfiguration of the existing networks, since networks must be more modular structures (Ahuja, 1992; Barabasi, 1997; Latora, 2000). It may also permit the decomposition of complex inter-subsystems for better and easier analysis. In practical terms the structures are simplified and broken in network subgraphs. These network subgraphs may change with time via addition or subtraction of nodes or links to allow for better control and modular subgraphs results in reconfiguration and flow control. Furthermore, changes may occur in network structure and topology due to link degradation (Ahuja, 1992). Various algorithms have therefore been developed to serve as tools for appropriately defining network topologies depending on the specific problem objectives. These include spanning trees, shortest — route algorithms, maximum flow algorithms, minimum — cost assignment network algorithms. Applications of these methods have been reported widely and may be found in the works of Ahuja et al., (1993) and Boyd (2004). The transportation, storage exchange/interconnection and planning networks, Naujoks et al. (1998) is the transportation facility layout etc.

2.1. Path Aggregation Method: Case Study

A typical telecommunication systems (Barbary, 2004), used for linking nodes and gate interconnection points is illustrated in Figure 3. It consists of a set of nodes which are the equipment such as switch, repeaters, multiplexers, Routers, switches, bridges and end nodes which are links used for connection of data communication links. The aggregated link capacities are as given in the left hand side column of the nodes where the nodes 1, 2 and 3 are terminal concentrators. Figure 3, summarizes the operational topologies of the network for the connection of node 1 to nodes, possible loops 1.2.3.1, 1.3.2.1 and 1.2.2.1 are indicated. Such loops are capable of causing undetectable loops resulting in undetectable operations of the network. Figure 3 further shows the connections of the busy user networks, all the nodes are interconnected and the links are the nodes are undetectable on the edges.

The objective of this paper, was to carry out performance analysis of the busy user networks, network and their links performance for the network traffic effect for the busy users in further.

2.2. Performance Analysis

It addresses the theory of system dynamics analysis to either to select the most effective architecture or design networks which drive a system to maximum performance. Network performance is concerned with measuring or estimating the parameters that represent.

The network behavior which is, most cases is the benchmark of what a system is capable of doing. The parameters of general interest are the network delay, throughput, link utilization etc. These parameters are consequently be measured in terms of transmission efficiency, reliability and operational cost of the network topologies (Barbary et al., 2004; Elgammal et al., 2009).
