Morocco Edith Wharton:

In Morocco Edith Wharton, 2016-08-12 Having begun my book with the statement that Morocco still lacks a guide book I should have wished to take a first step toward remedying that deficiency But the conditions in which I travelled though full of unexpected and picturesque opportunities were not suited to leisurely study of the places visited The time was limited by the approach of the rainy season which puts an end to motoring over the treacherous trails of the Spanish zone In 1918 owing to the watchfulness of German submarines in the Straits and along the northwest coast of Africa the trip by sea from Marseilles to Casablanca ordinarily so easy was not to be made without much discomfort and loss of time Once on board the steamer passengers were often kept in port without leave to land for six or eight days therefore for any one bound by a time limit as most war workers were it was necessary to travel Pg viii across country and to be back at Tangier before the November rains This left me only one month in which to visit Morocco from the Mediterranean to the High Atlas and from the Atlantic to Fez and even had there been a Djinn's carpet to carry me the multiplicity of impressions received would have made precise observation difficult The next best thing to a Djinn's carpet a military motor was at my disposal every morning but war conditions imposed restrictions and the wish to use the minimum of petrol often stood in the way of the second visit which alone makes it possible to carry away a definite and detailed impression In Morocco by Edith Wharton Edith Wharton, 1927

In Morocco Part 1 Edith Wharton, 2025-06-25 Part 1 chronicles Wharton's early impressions of Morocco as she travels through Rabat, Sal Volubilis, Meknès and Fez. She vividly captures the contrast between Islamic heritage and French administrative presence in the cities. In Fez, detailed observations of local crafts, markets and women's lives reveal a deep curiosity about Moroccan daily rhythms. Through ruins and rituals, Wharton uncovers the tension between tradition and transformation. This section lays a lyrical foundation for her cultural and emotional engagement with Morocco.

In Morocco Edith Wharton, 2020-12-03 To step on board a steamer in a Spanish port and three hours later to land in a country without a guide book is a sensation to rouse the hunger of the repletest sight-seer. The sensation is attainable by any one who will take the trouble to row out into the harbour of Algeciras and scramble onto a little black boat headed across the straits. Hardly has the rock of Gibraltar turned to cloud when one's foot is on the soil of an almost unknown Africa. Tangier indeed is in the guide books but cuckoo-like it has had to lay its eggs in strange nests and the traveller who wants to find out about it must acquire a work dealing with some other country, Spain or Portugal or Algeria. There is no guidebook to Morocco and no way of knowing once one has left Tangier behind where the long trail over the Rif is going to land one in the sense understood by any one accustomed to European certainties. The air of the unforeseen blows on one from the roadless passes of the Atlas.
