Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported depression among the adult population in the United States. The study was conducted using data from the 2001 National Health and Medical Examination Survey (NHANES), a large, nationally representative survey of the U.S. population. The study included 10,148 participants aged 18 years and older. The prevalence of self-reported depression was determined by asking participants if they had ever been told by a doctor or other health professional that they had depression. The prevalence of self-reported depression was 10.1% among the adult population in the United States. The prevalence of self-reported depression was higher among women than men (11.1% vs. 9.1%), among those with a high school diploma or less than those with a college degree (11.1% vs. 9.1%), and among those with a low income than those with a high income (11.1% vs. 9.1%).

Family and Community Health, 2005 This document is one of two evidence based cornerstones of the World Health Organization's WHO new initiative to develop and implement evidence based guidelines for family planning The first cornerstone the Medical eligibility criteria for contraceptive use third edition published in 2004 provides guidance for who can use contraceptive methods safely This document the Selected practice recommendations for contraceptive use second edition provides guidance for how to use contraceptive methods safely and effectively once they are deemed to be medically appropriate The recommendations contained in this document are the product of a process that culminated in an expert Working Group meeting held at the World Health Organization Geneva 13-16 April 2004 Medical Eligibility Criteria for Contraceptive Use. 5th Edition, 2015

Who Medical Eligibility Criteria Wheel for Contraceptive Use World Health Organization, 2015-08-25 Family planning allows people to attain their desired number of children and determine the spacing of pregnancies It is achieved through use of contraceptive methods and the treatment of infertility Promotion of family planning and ensuring access to preferred contraceptive methods for women and couples is essential to securing the well being and autonomy of women while supporting the health and development of communities Family planning contraception is key to slowing unsustainable population growth and the resulting negative global impacts on the economy environment and national and regional development efforts It follows therefore that safe contraceptive methods need to be available to as many women as possible including those that have a pre existing medical condition WHO's Medical Eligibility Criteria for Contraceptive Use which was first published in 1996 provides family planning providers with guidance on helping those living with medical conditions to find a contraceptive method that works for them For each medical condition or medically relevant characteristic contraceptive methods are placed into one of four numbered categories Category 1 A condition for which there is no restriction for the use of the contraceptive method Category 2 A condition where the advantages of using the method generally outweigh the theoretical or proven risks Category 3 A condition where the theoretical or proven risks usually outweigh the advantages of using the method Category 4 A condition which represents an unacceptable health risk if the contraceptive method is used This simple classification enables family planning providers to provide contraception safely to women and men who previously may have been excluded from methods because of a lack of clinical guidance
