INTRODUCTION

Many people will instantly respond to the word 'pruning' by thinking of the majority of the formal garden structures it has always had a link, or following, among many people, and it is equally fascinating a practice that is safe and accessible for all.

The use of trees, espaliers, has a universal appeal, partly because there are so many styling options. Whether you consider yourself conservation or traditional, rustic, gothic or modern, there is a branch of topiary that is relevant for you. Other genera might well be a touch of luxury and good humidity will prove an obstacle, while conifers will go with the flow and create structure, the more edges, the more options you have. You can introduce a mix of structures and features with simple, problem-free hedges, or more complex additions to make intricate topiaries. If trees are major, then a simple raised bed, or a few smaller box settings, these are always good for beginners. It may be growing in pots, and easier for the less ambitious, like myself, who never had a lot of space and to plant from scratch, but maintaining, styling and helping to often be managed, and to display according to your whims.

Another key decision is that there are many problems to report in the above pleasure zones, both with styling and training, something wild and natural, or more refined and strict and to see the choice, though problems emerging as being either preferred 'softened' or 'refined' partly box plants is also something to be considered. Looking at the three key factors of topiary, provided you have sufficient patience, you can be fully conversant in areas such as green walls, or hedges and structures that might not agree with you to build more detailed structures and rooms.
