

$$\text{Percentage loss of prestress due to friction} = \frac{49.357}{1200.000} \times 100 = 4.113 \%$$

$$\text{Percentage loss of prestress due to anchorage} = \frac{63.902}{1200.000} \times 100 = 5.325 \%$$

Note that the anchorage loss is calculated at the jacking end since it has maximum value at this location, while friction loss is calculated for the half length of the tendon (Since jacking force is applied at both ends).
