Neurodegenerative Diseases: From Gut-Brain Axis to Brain Microbiome George Tetz, Robert Friedland, 2023-06-08 While there are growing lines of evidence for the role of the gut microbiome in different neurodegenerative diseases the role and even the existence of the brain microbiome is only starting to be uncovered. Indeed the brain was long considered to be a sterile environment and only recent studies have shown the presence of bacteria and fungi in the human central nervous system and even inhabiting brain cells. The so called brain microbiome is appealing and immediately drew attention since it is highly possible that microorganisms could have profound direct effects on a variety of processes in the brain with the non-limiting examples of neurodegenerative and neurodevelopmental diseases triggering and progression. However the brain microbiome remains poorly understood and even despite recent technological advances it has only begun to be explored.

The SAGES Manual of Evolving Techniques in Pancreatic Surgery Eugene P. Ceppa, Kevin M. El-Hayek, Melissa E. Hogg, Nicolò Pecorelli, 2025-03-29 Management of diseases of the pancreas is varied and complex and the diagnoses leading to surgical consideration dictate what technical approaches are feasible and safe. Over the last decade this has changed considerably and as a result the necessity of documenting the updated surgical approaches is not only warranted yet paramount to surgeons. This manual presents a contemporary description of pancreatic surgery. The classic open approach maintains relevancy yet refinement in technique has improved outcomes. The application of laparoscopic techniques provides improvement in recovery when applied appropriately yet further technological innovations continue to improve this approach. Further innovation and research in robotic, percutaneous and endoscopic techniques have broadened the horizon of the management of pancreatic disease. Chapters in this manual address surgical therapy of benign and malignant disease of the pancreas including management of acute and chronic pancreatitis as well as benign premalignant and malignant pancreatic neoplasms and will focus on specific disease processes and the various approaches that are currently applied. Each of the chapters addresses patient selection, pre-operative considerations, technical conduct of the procedures and minimizing morbidity. A brief review of the existing literature addressing the particular topic is included in each chapter with extensive illustrations and selected video clips.

The nature of activatory and tolerogenic dendritic cell-derived signal 2 Francesca Granucci, Ivan Zanoni, Manfred B. Lutz, 2014-07-08 One of the most interesting issues in immunology is how the innate and adaptive branches of the immune system cooperate in vertebrate organisms to respond and destroy invading microorganisms without destroying self tissues More than 20 years ago Charles Janeway proposed the innate immune recognition theory 1 He hypothesized the existence of innate receptors Pattern recognition receptors PRRs that by recognizing molecular structures associated to pathogens PAMPs and being expressed by antigen presenting cells APCs and epithelial cells could alert the immune system to the presence of a pathogen making it possible to mount an immediate inflammatory response Moreover by transducing the alert signal in professional APCs and inducing the expression of costimulatory molecules these receptors could control the activation of lymphocytes bearing clonal antigen specific receptors thereby promoting appropriate adaptive immune responses Since adaptive immunity can be activated also following sterile inflammatory conditions it was subsequently proposed by Polly Matzinger that the innate immune system could be also activated by endogenous danger signals generically called danger associated molecular patterns DAMPs 2 The first prediction has been amply confirmed by the discovery of Toll like receptors 3 4 5 and cytoplasmic PRRs such as RIG like receptors 6 Other PRR families such as the NOD like receptors and C type lectins exert immunogenic or tolerogenic signals 7 8 9 and may recognize not strictly pathogens but also endogenous danger signals that may lead to inflammasome activation 10 11 Dendritic cells DCs have been identified as the cells of the innate immune system that by sensing PAMPs or DAMPs transduce signals to the nucleus This leads to a transcriptional reprogramming of DCs with the consequent expression of three signals namely signal 1 MHC peptide signal 2 surface costimulatory molecules and signal 3 cytokines necessary for the priming of antigen specific naïve T cell responses signal 1 and 2 and T cell polarization signal 3 The reason why DCs are superior with respect to other professional APCs in naïve T cell activation has not been unequivocally defined but in vivo may mainly result from their migration capacity to secondary lymphoid organs It has not been established whether DCs can provide a special signal 2 or simply very high levels compared with other APCs of commonly expressed signals 1 and 2 so that a naïve T cell could reach the threshold of activation A second aspect of DC biology needs also to be taken into account Concerning the question of how self tissues are not destroyed following the initiation of adaptive immune responses different mechanisms of central and peripheral auto reactive T cell tolerization have been proposed 12 In particular it has been defined that high affinity T cells are deleted in the thymus while low affinity auto reactive T cells or T cells specific for tissue sequestered antigens that do not have access to the thymus are controlled in the periphery. In a simplified vision of how peripheral T cell tolerance could be induced and maintained it was thought that in resting conditions immature DCs expressing low levels of signal 1 and low or no levels of signal 2 were able to induce T cell unresponsiveness. Nevertheless it is now clear that a fundamental contribution to the peripheral tolerance is due to the conversion of naïve T cells into peripheral regulatory T cells pTreg cells and it is also clear that DCs need to receive a specific conditioning to become able to induce pTreg cell differentiation. Even more intriguing is that also DCs activated through PRRs with particular Toll like receptor TLR agonists are capable of generating pTreg cell conversion if these agonists induce the production of the appropriate cytokines
