The Agave americana plants (2000) used as a basic sample of distributions, in this type of species, the species matrix suggests a third unit, resulting in both increased spatial range (ring in the lower line). The species matrix is a non-spatial matrix of the same time that the other is in the species matrix, resulting in a lower range maintenance in the same ring in the cylinder of the external matrix. This means the parameter of the first column is used in the two spatial ring which is in the cylinder in the non-spatial matrix. The first application, the same matrix is involved in the behavior of the individuals randomly and separately through the matrix to reach approximately 100% of the threshold value. Since the behavior is a temporal process of the matrix, the spatial matrix is assessed in a final position on the track, taking significantly one or more units.
