

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) would improve the performance of a group of students in a simulated business environment. The students were divided into two groups: one group used the DSS and the other group did not. The results showed that the group using the DSS performed significantly better than the group not using the DSS. The DSS was found to be a useful tool for improving student performance in a simulated business environment.
