Cities and agricultural transformation in Africa Vandercasteelen, Joachim,Tamru, Seneshaw,Minten, Bart,Swinnen, Johan,2016-07-01 Due to the rapid growth of cities in Africa many more farmers are now living in rural hinterlands in relatively close proximity to cities where many provide food to urban residents However empirical evidence on how urbanization affects these farmers is scarce To fill this gap this paper explores the relationship between proximity to a city and the production behavior of rural staple crop producers In particular we analyze data from teff producing farmers in major producing areas around Addis Ababa the Ethiopian capital We find that farmers located closer to Addis Ababa face higher wages and land rental prices and because they receive higher teff prices they have better incentives to intensify production Moreover we observe that modern input use land and labor productivity and profitability in teff production improve with urban proximity This urban proximity has a strong and significant effect on these aspects of teff production possibly related to the use of more formal factor markets lower transaction costs in crop production and marketing and better access to information In contrast we do not find a strong and positive relationship between rural population density increases and agricultural transformation increased population density seems to lead to immiserizing effects in these settings Our results show that urban proximity should be considered as an important determinant of the process of agricultural intensification and transformation in developing countries

Applied Microeconometrics Using Stata Adrian Colin Cameron, Pravin K. Trivedi, 2008-12-15 Covering important topics omitted from basic introductions to Stata Microeconometrics Using Stata shows how to do microeconomic research using Stata. It provides the most complete and up to date survey of microeconomic methods available in Stata. After a brief introduction to Stata the authors present linear regression simulation and generalized least squares methods. The section on cross sectional techniques is complete with up to date treatments of instrumental variables methods for linear models as well as quantile regression methods. The next section covers estimators for the parameters of linear panel data models. The book explores standard random effects and fixed effects methods along with mixed linear models used in many areas outside of econometrics. After introducing methods for nonlinear regression models the authors discuss how to code new nonlinear estimators in Stata. They show how to easily implement new nonlinear estimators. The authors also cover inference using analytical and bootstrap approximations to the distribution of test statistics. The book then contains a section on methods for different nonlinear models including multinomial selection count data and nonlinear panel data models. By combining intuitive introductions and detailed discussions of Stata examples this book provides an invaluable hands on introduction to microeconometrics.
