Nice Gaps Are You Making Difference:

Mind the Inclusion Gap Suzy Levy, 2023-05-11 Diversity programmes are everywhere But despite all the intention and focus progress is painfully slow Homophobia transphobia racism and misogyny remain stubbornly pervasive and unfortunately many inclusion programmes do more to create negativity toward the diversity agenda than they do to bring about measurable and lasting change Why isn't change happening more rapidly What are we doing wrong Or better yet what should we be doing differently if we want to drive different outcomes Although most of us are curious about diversity and some would go so far as to call ourselves allies very few of us are skilled in inclusion In the absence of knowing what to do we double down on being nice and hope that will be enough Unfortunately this optimistic attitude may harm as much as help This book is for anyone who wants to dive into the complex task of supporting diversity and increasing inclusion It's filled with insight and practical know how It will help you navigate the polarised and divisive issues we face and move beyond just talking about diversity to playing an active role in shaping an inclusive future Closing the Gap, 2006 Electrical Review, 1892 Electrical Engineer, 1898 The Surface Science of Metal Oxides, 2000 The surface science of metal oxides is studied using a variety of experimental and theoretical techniques allowing the geometry electronic structure dynamics and the behaviour of the metal oxide metal interface to be explored Faraday Discussions documents a long established series of Faraday Discussion meetings which provide a unique international forum for the exchange of views and newly acquired results in developing areas of physical chemistry biophysical chemistry and chemical physics The papers presented are published in the Faraday Discussion volume together with a record of the discussion contributions made at the meeting Faraday Discussions therefore provide an important record of current international knowledge and views in the field concerned The Sword and the trowel; ed. by C.H. Spurgeon London metrop. tabernacle, 1882 Scientific American, 1896 FYI Michael M. Cohen, Richard R. Nelson, John P. Walsh, 2000 Based on a survey questionnaire administered to 1478 R D labs in the U S manufacturing sector in 1994 we find that firms typically protect the profits due to invention with a range of mechanisms including patents secrecy lead time advantages and the use of complementary marketing and manufacturing capabilities Of these mechanisms however patents tend to be the least emphasized by firms in the majority of manufacturing industries and secrecy and lead time tend to be emphasized most heavily A comparison of our results with the earlier survey findings of Levin et al 1987 suggest that patents may be relied upon somewhat more heavily by larger firms now than in the early 1980s For the protection of product innovations secrecy now appears to be much more heavily employed across most industries than previously Our results on the motives to patent indicate that firms patent for reasons that often extend beyond directly profiting from a patented innovation through either its commercialization or licensing In addition to the prevention of copying the most prominent motives for patenting include the prevention of rivals from patenting related inventions i e patent blocking the use of patents in negotiations and the prevention of suits We find that firms commonly patent for different reasons in discrete product industries such as chemicals versus complex product industries such as telecommunications equipment or semiconductors In the former firms appear to use their patents commonly to block the development of substitutes by rivals and in the latter firms are much more likely to use patents to force rivals into negotiations
