RESEARCHERS in the United Kingdom believe it is possible to use the in vitro fertilization technique to produce embryos that could be used to replace a couple's defective gene. This would allow the couple to have a child free from the risk of passing on a genetic defect, while still being able to have a child with the same genetic make-up as the first child. The research is being carried out by scientists at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. The scientists are using a technique called zygote donation to produce embryos that are genetically identical to the first child, but which do not carry the defective gene. The technique involves using a donor egg and a sperm cell from the same couple to produce a zygote. The zygote is then fertilized with a sperm cell from the same couple, but which does not carry the defective gene. The resulting embryo is then implanted in the woman's uterus. the operator wishes to do a hydraulic lift to the deck and does not possess a hydraulic cylinder kit, he can obtain either single or double acting, 1000 psi rated A.S.A.F. standard theory hydraulic cylinders and use them. These are standard hydraulic cylinders and are available with necessary hoses and a specially designed "level arm" design. Consider most A.S.A.F. requirements and designs, should the need arise. The theory of standard coupling allows a break away hydraulic line, without damage, should the operator wish to stop and change the cylinder. The coupling also allows reattachment of a cylinder without the need for a hose. If the cylinder is used, it is strongly advised that the positioning kit (sometimes referred to as "swing kit") is used in order to prevent the raking height after the cylinder extension. This kit will prevent variation of the raking angle and movements without the need for a hose.

The types of thrusts found to be most economical are the "V" extension thrusts, the swinging thrusts and the universal thrusts, as there are still other proven nonswinging in the field. It is recommended, however, that when the thrust is equipped with a single speed reduced hydraulic control valve, that the "V" extension thrusts be used, as Fig. 3. In this case if a swinging or universal thrust were used, difficulty would be encountered in providing the lower legs from moving much less than the hydraulic lift was operated. If it is not practical to connect the lower legs by means of the stay links which are thrust with the "V" thrusts, this problem may be easily solved by fitting a double speed valve.
